INVASIVE SPECIES GROUP

Emerging issues in invasive species science and management

16th June 2011, Harper Adams University College

The Invasive Species Specialist Group of the British Ecological Society is holding its annual conference on emerging issues in all aspects of the ecological science and applied management of invasive alien species. Contributions from both academia and the conservation sector are encouraged, as the group aims to facilitate knowledge exchange between research and application at all levels.

The organisers would like to encourage the presentation of:

- Original research
- Research in progress, especially from early career researchers and postgraduate students
- Practitioner management and control case studies

Papers may be submitted for full presentations (15 minutes plus questions) or posters.
